THE GRAPEVINE

ST. JAMES PARISH • WILMINGTON, NC
WEEK OF NOVEMBER 22, 2020

THE REV. CHERYL BRAINARD

THANKFUL FOR MORNING PRAYER

One of the things for which I am most grateful during this COVID time is that of corporate Morning Prayer. For most of my adult life, I have practiced the ritual of “prayer in the morning,” often even accompanied by music, but growing up as a Baptist, I was not exposed to Morning Prayer as a worship service. We were taught to pray about everything, and prayers before meals and at bedtime were givens. In a round-about way, I was even taught to offer a prayer of thanksgiving each day when I awoke to my mother’s voice singing, Oh What A Beautiful Morning. As our later teenage sleeping ears perhaps didn’t share the wonder she felt in the mornings, it was still part of our “daily office.”

Since becoming an Episcopalian—some 28 years now, I have learned that prior to our 1979 Book of Common Prayer, Morning Prayer was the chief Sunday service in most Anglican churches on three out of four Sundays. Many of you may remember that Holy Communion was generally celebrated only once a month. For the most part, Morning Prayer on Sundays has not continued because the Eucharist (or Thanksgiving) has been recognized as the “principal act of Christian worship on the Lord’s Day” (BCP, 13) in most parishes.

In many times and places, daybreak has been a time of prayer. Jews prayed in their synagogues at sunrise as well as at other times each day. The Christian monastics followed suit with the Daily Office, with its prayers or “hours” seven times each day. Thomas Cranmer’s revision of the Daily Office for the first English Prayer Book (1549) reduced the number of services to two—one for morning (Matins) and one for evening (Evensong or vespers).

In years past, many attempts have been made at St James (and other Episcopal churches) to keep Morning Prayer alive. However, usually only one or two folks would attend. You can learn more about the history of Morning Prayer on the website of the Episcopal Church, but there is nothing like actually experiencing it for yourself. In our COVID-time Zoom Morning Prayer, it has become a beautiful way to begin the day. We are a community gathered to worship, pray, read Holy Scripture together, and listen to music. The prayers and music are so varied that I smile wondering what the day will bring. Who knows, one day you all may just get to hear, Oh What A Beautiful Morning.

ANGEL TREE 2020

Let's spread some Christmas cheer this year! The Angel Tree will be out at Mt. Lebanon Chapel continuing Sunday, November 22nd. Make plans to stop by and pick up your tags. If you are not attending church physically, you may certainly request a tag or several online by emailing Rachel Colonna at rcolonna85@gmail.com! Our goal is to be able to provide gifts for local children in need. Together, we can make Christmas magic happen for these families. We are continuing to partner with the Brigade Boys and Girls Club to sponsor 200 children with a gift cap of $25 each. Parishioners again have the option of donating gift cards to help the Brigade directors "fill in the gaps" where the needs of the children have not been met by gift donations. Please stop by the church office to receive more information. Angel Tree gifts are to be dropped off at the church by Friday, December 11th. Learn more at <https://www.stjamesp.org/blog/angel-tree-2020/>

Each session will contain either a short video clip or a reading as a springboard for conversation. We will utilize the expertise of the Gottman Institute which is the culmination of Drs. This presentation is designed to deepen our appreciation of both the words and the music of Handel's oratorio. Optional readings and a background study guide will be available. Questions? Contact Cheryl at cheryl@stjamesp.org to sign up.

It enables participants to explore and deepen their Christian belief through study of the Bible, Christian history, and theology. We examine our own beliefs and reflect on applying scripture to our everyday lives. We work to deepen our faith and to discover how to express it in service to others.

TAKING A STEP BACK

by Erin Becker

Some of you know me. Some of you don't realize you know me, but you kind of do. My name is Erin and I'm the one behind the scenes posting pictures to St. James' Instagram and Facebook pages, curating the weekly email, editing videos, and even helping coordinate your regularly scheduled Zoom calls. Truth be told, I'm much more comfortable behind the scenes. When Cookie asked me to speak on Sunday, my initial reaction was "Nope, nahh, thank you for considering me but, no." In her Cookie way, she got me started talking about The Social Dilemma and how it discusses topics I'm very familiar with: social media, communication, and technology. In sharing with her, I realized that, yes, I do have something to say. Several somethings, actually.

The first of which is illustrated in the story of what happened immediately following my discussion with Cookie. Cookie left my new office. I quickly pulled out my phone and texted my husband. "Guess who just got nominated to give a sermon on Sunday?" Well, at least that's what I thought I'd sent. Michael promptly replied with "Wait, what? Okay... I guess... Okay." I carry on to explain that we'll be watching the Social Dilemma and discussing social media, communication, and how where we spend our attention impacts us. He texts back, "Okay, I just need to know how long I have to talk for and I should probably see the movie." Wait a second... I realize we're having completely different conversations. I scroll up in the text thread and quickly spot the disconnect. Remember how I said I thought I'd sent him "Guess who just got nominated to give a sermon on Sunday?" What I had actually sent him was, "Guess you just got nominated to give a sermon on Sunday." It's so easy for things to get lost in translation with text alone. What's said over your phone or your computer can mean very different things to each person depending on their context.

It reminds me of when I first started using Facebook. I'm going to date myself a little bit here as I started using Facebook back when "poking" was still a thing and when you had to type out your emoticons (aka, ye olden emojis). I was 18 and a freshman in college and, like many of my peers, I had a habit of sharing my "status" (which is kind of like Facebook's version of the tweet- don't worry - it's long been extinct). I was feeling particularly angsty one day. The guy I had been talking to at the time wasn't texting me back in and I posted some song lyrics that spoke to my mood. One of my friends, promptly commented on my post saying how she just knew I was talking about her. She didn't appreciate being called out publicly and made her displeasure known. Thankfully, 18-year-old Erin, though somewhat dramatic, was smart enough to know that an actual conversation needed to happen and so I called her and explained where my overly theatrical statement had come from. If I hadn't, we might have damaged our friendship by what could have continued online.

Not too long after that, I'd gotten my first digital camera, yes- I'm old enough to be pre-smartphone, anyways, I was thrilled with my little Nikon. I documented everything and posted it. I had the usual likes and a few nice comments here or there... But then I got another comment, "Your photos are strange and pointless." I don't remember the nice comments, but more than 13 years later, I still remember that one. Verbatim. It wasn't even that mean in all honesty. But it was something I had been excited about sharing. All of the sudden that excitement was gone. Then next time I went to post something, I found myself wondering, what would that person think. Is this "strange and pointless?" It wasn't just one post that had been tainted, it made me question myself. Was I "Strange and pointless?" It was time to take a step back and remind myself that my worth doesn't come from what other people think, and I may be strange, but I know God's got me here for a reason. I'm definitely not pointless, and neither is anyone else on this earth. The hurtful comment wasn't the first and it definitely wasn't the last. I'm not going to stand here and tell you that negative comments, even from friends or family who unintentionally overstep, don't make you question yourself as you get older. They still do.

Instead, I've learned some better ways to respond and to remind myself to take that important step back. Therapy taught me something called the triangle theory. It might have a more legit sounding name, but I call it the Triangle theory. Essentially it's this: Everything is a triangle, made up of three points. You are one point on the triangle, Friend A is another point on the triangle, Friend B is the third point. The lines between, represent relationships and help you realize which relationships you can impact, and which you shouldn't try to mess with. For example: You can directly impact your relationship with Friend A, you can directly impact your relationship with Friend B, but boy are you in for a world of mess if you try to touch that line between Friend A and Friend B. The interesting thing about this theory is that the points can be anything. It could be you, a classmate, and a selfie that you are super proud of. You cannot control how your classmate chooses to interact with your selfie. If they like it, great, if they don't and post a rude comment, that's not your fault. You cannot control that. Remembering the triangle helps us to step back at focus on the things we can control.

One thing we can control is where we spend your time and our attention. We know time's important, they have that saying "time is money" for a reason. But what about attention? Think back to a time when someone made a true difference for you in your life. What made that interaction so important? Was it what they said or did? Or... was it the fact that they looked, they saw, and they gave you their true attention? I'd argue that they saying and doing only works if the attention is there. Be honest, how many times have you tossed out a vague "yeah" to someone because you weren't paying attention? How many times have you been "yeah'd"? It stinks. It feels like they don't care. And it's important to remember that isn't necessarily the case. Let's face it, we've all "yeah'd" people we love and value. It's so so easy to get sucked caught up in the world around us, into social media and the constant barrage of interesting stories, world shifting current events, classmate drama, pop stars getting awards, the feelings that all of those evoke.

I think that's part of why we have to be so intentional about taking that step back, not just when conflicts arise but taking a moment to see for where we place our attention. It's not just social media that causes the noise and distraction. I challenge us all to take that step back and ask ourselves what good does using my attention this way do. Will it build up your relationship with Friend A? Will it build up your relationship with your family? Will it build up your relationship with yourself? What about your relationship with God? Will it build up your relationship with him? Or will there be some "yeah-ing?" Sometimes, the answer will be yes, others, it will be no. The good news is, God is used to the "yeah's" and he loves us anyways. He knows just what we need to shake us up. And maybe, that shake-up comes from taking a step back and putting down the phone for a little while... or at least turning off notifications. Take the step back, and refocus your attention to where it matters most.

A SPECIAL THANKS

Last Saturday, November 7th, under warm blue skies, around 75 of the men of St. James gathered for an afternoon of fun, food, and fellowship. Thanks to the generosity of Lyell and Brian McMerty for hosting the event at their historic Pleasant Oaks Plantation in Brunswick County. The men safely gathered for the first Parish Life Event since the pandemic began and enjoyed a history hayride, games, BBQ, Compline, and a short message from Bill Clark on this year's Stewardship Efforts. We even raised money for a donation to The Boys and Girls Brigade Clubs of Wilmington. It was a special, and much-appreciated event, so again many thanks to the McMertys!
